When you consider that the teen years are a period of intense growth, not only physically but intellectually, it's understandable that it's a time of confusion and upheaval.

Despite our many challenges with teens, they are often energetic, idealistic, with a deep interest in being treated fairly. Although it can be a period of conflict, the teen years are also a time to help kids grow into individuals.

This workshop will assist you in exploring your feelings and how, when dealing with our teens, we can sometimes find ourselves struggling with their behaviors. We as the CASA staff cannot encourage you enough to attend this workshop. Ms. Jimenez is a past CASA supervisor and a local therapist dealing with some of the most difficult children of the Child Welfare system. We are proud to offer this workshop. See you there!
